Most of my friends have a 360 and a Wii. I prefer the Wii because I've always loved the small, simple controller, the simplicity of the interface and the fact that, despite popular belief, you can actually play most games with the controller in your hand. That doesn't mean I don't enjoy my 360, though. I actually find it easier to play for hours at a time on the 360, not because it's better, just because I'm used to it and it's in my hands, but I still enjoy it just as much. My 360 even came with a copy of WCW: Attitude as a special gift. It was a great way to waste money on a game that wasn't a 3DS or PSN game, and it was a great way to waste time, too. My Wii is the same way. The only reason I got a Wii was because I had played it so many times with my friends, but once I got it, I found that the games I played on it were just as fun and just as addicting. On the Wii, I'm completely satisfied with a split decision. I've always preferred console gaming to PC gaming, so it's only natural that a console will always have the most games available. The Wii was the first system with the Wii Motion Plus and the Wii Remote. Now that the PS3 and the Xbox 360 have launched, we're seeing a wave of Wii games being released for those systems, and the Nintendo e-shop is also selling them. While I'm not as big a fan of the Wii as I am of the Wii Motion Plus, I love the simplicity of the Wii Remote. I find the Wii Remote more intuitive and easier to use than the PlayStation Move. My friends use the Wii Remote to play their games on our systems and, while they've had fun, I find it much easier to use the Wii Remote and feel like I'm actually playing the game. That's why I'm glad that the Wii Remote is backwards compatible, because I have so much fun with it that I would probably get frustrated if I had to use a Move controller. While the Wii Remote is better for Mario or Zelda, it is still a good controller for other types of games, too. I don't get why a lot of people complain that the Wii Remote is not as accurate as the Move, and I don 82157476af
