However, the Romanized transliteration used in this article is also given for those users who are not familiar with Hebrew. For a more accurate preview, simply switch to another Unicode based font-family. For example, SIL Gentium or DejaVu Sans will properly display all characters and proper rendering of formatting marks (like Teiva). If you use a Unicode based font-family, the characters will be displayed as intended. Each character should look as it does on this page. There may be a problem with your browser's font rendering engine, if not please try a different web browser.
